This decision excited the indignation of the vast majority of our citizens. Some of the committee were called to task by influential citizens. It appeared that they were jealous of the power of the priest. It was said "The Father Mathew camp should not have been established. All the people should have gone to our camp." Washington special to the Cincinnati Enuirer: "Judge Lochrane, formerly chiefastice of Georgia, will publish an open letter here to morrow, addressed to General Robert Toombs, on the subject of his dispatch to Chicago saying 'Death to the Union.' Loch-rane disclaims for himself and his family any share in that sentiment, which, he says, notwithstanding it represents few people of sense in Georgia, will do injury to the State throughout the north. Lochrane says that the doctrine of State rights was surrendered and only opening the wicket occasionally to let one or two persons out to go to congress. The letter is written with elequence, and reserves nothing whatever from an absolute trample on their rights, rob them, and hand expression of fealty and enthusiasm for over much of the spoils to the officers of the Union. He slindes to General Grant over much of the spoils to the officers of the State as a donation. With these facts before as the wisest triend the south can have Cigars and Tobacco. in this emergency. While he was preparing Judge Lochrane at the St. James hotel. asked him if the old leaders of opinion were of his way of thinking. He said ther; was not much to be expected from the old poli-

icians, who were reaping some temperary interest from this States rights and sectiona feeling, but that the business men and young men in Georgia were looking kindly toward other, keeping out emigration and capital. By God," said the judge, "if this thing keeps on, there will be a growth of weeds all over which alienate from our stricken people and Georgia, from Flint river to the Comberland mountains." I asked him if Alex H. Stephens took the same view.

"The trouble with Stephens," said the adge, "is writing up this doctrine of State Late in life he wrote a book called The War Between the States, and he is like Sangrado, in Gil Blas, who believed that leeding was the cure for everything. His servant said to him: 'If you don't stop this kind of practice you will kill everybody in the country, as they are all dying after your treat-ment.' 'Never mind,' said 'Sangrado,' 'we must bleed them to prove the book true.' I inquired how Ben Hill stood on this sub-

"He started gued himself almost into secession again. He to the alley between Main and Se gued himself almost into secession again. He said some time ago that a man who had been among the northern Democrats and did not stick to them ought to go to the penitentiary. I told him that a man who had been among the northern people who persisted in Hill's views ought to go to the lunatic asylum."

As to Joe Brown, the judge said: "His misfertune is that he went to fine Chicago convention in 1868 in favor of Grant, and when Grant put a Garman in his cabinet Brown flopped back to the Democrats, and it is hard for a man to move twice in the proper direction."

Judge Lochrane said that if Grant was nominated he meant to stump the State for him, and that there would be a full Grant him, and that there would be a full Grant electoral ticket run in Georgia, and he felt certain that it would carry the State.
